From the Pastor

Since we are celebrating Mary in the month of May, this article from Catholic Answers gives us another answer to the question “How did the early church explain the Perpetual Virginity of Mary?” There is a document from the second century known as the Protoevangelium of James. It is also sometimes called the Infancy Gospel of James, or even just the Gospel of James, and it deals with the early life of the Virgin Mary. That is why it is called the Protoevangelium—or First Gospel. It deals with the early series of events before the actual birth and ministry of Christ. According to the Protoevangelium of James, Mary was a consecrated virgin. She had been pledged to the temple by her parents, and served at the temple in Jerusalem. But when she reached a certain point in her life, she began to be ritually unclean under the Jewish laws, and consequently she could not stay at the temple. She needed, therefore, a guardian, but because she was a consecrated virgin, she needed a guardian who was not going to be interested in leading a normal married life with her. And so a selection process was begun, and as a result, Joseph, an elderly widower who already had a family and therefore wasn’t looking for another one, was deemed a suitable guardian for a consecrated virgin like Mary. According to this theory, therefore, the “brethren of Christ” were his stepbrothers through Joseph, rather than the cousin idea that is commonly heard today. Now the Protoevangelium of James was probably written around the year 150—sometime in the middle of the second century—within a century of the Virgin Mary’s own life. So even though it is not part of the Bible, and the church does not consider it inspired writing, it nevertheless may contain some accurate traditions regarding Jesus’s family. And this could be one of them.

Cont.’d from PASTOR’S MESSAGE

The second theory was popularized by Saint Jerome when a conflict broke out in his day in the early 400’s regarding Mary’s virginity. According to St. Jerome, the “Brethren of Christ” that are mentioned in Scripture are actually cousins or other relatives of that kind. There is some support for this theory in the fact that Aramaic—the language that was spoken in Jesus’s day—does not have a word for cousin. You have to use circumlocutions like “the son of my uncle” or “the daughter of my aunt” or things like that. And some have suggested that the words brother and sister may have, at times, been used as synonyms for cousin. But that is somewhat speculative. In any event, St. Jerome popularized the “cousin” theory, and it is one of the most common today.
